Re: Munther Omar Saleh
U.S. v. Munther Omar Saleh
15 Cr. 393 (MKB)

Dear Ms. Colson:

At your request, I have reviewed the document prepared by Assistant U.S. Attorney Alexander Solomon, along with an underlying affidavit prepared by Kostas A. Katsavdakakis, Ph.D., both dated January 31, 2018. In response to these documents, I would offer the following observations. The U.S. Attorney's letter asserts that Dr. Xenakis's report and conclusions are flawed because of a reliance on "psychological testing that is not specific to the threat assessment context." This claim is based on a flawed understanding of the nature and purpose of the psychological testing that was conducted, along with a misrepresentation of the validity of existing risk assessment tools. The basis for these observations are as follows.

First, Dr. Katsavdakakis writes, in his report, that "the psychological testing instruments utilized in preparation for the Summary Letter are not adequate to address the assessment of risk, threat or recidivism." This conclusion implies, incorrectly, that Dr. Xenakis's conclusions were based solely on these psychological tests, rather than on extensive clinical interviews, a review of available records, and collateral information. The psychological testing administered was intended to aid in Dr. Xenakis's assessment, including addressing questions about possible psychiatric diagnoses, cognitive functioning, and response style. These tests are widely used and well accepted for these purposes, all of which are potentially relevant to the assessment of an individual's risk of violence and recidivism.

Dr. Katsavdakakis does correctly note that "Psychological testing instruments have been developed to assess risk, threat and recidivism in the violence, criminality and terrorism contexts. These include the third edition of the Historical-Clinical-Risk Management-20 (HCR-20 V3), the Violent Extremism Risk Assessment Protocol (VERA and VERA 2), the Multi-Level Guidelines, and the Extremism Risk Guidelines (ERG 22+), among others" (emphasis added). This statement is, of course, accurate. What is not stated in Dr. Katsavdakakis's affidavit (or the U.S. Attorney's letter), but is critical to understanding why or if these "instruments" should have been used in this evaluation, is the question of whether any of these "instruments" have any demonstrated validity. Quite simply, they do not.

U.S. v. Munther Omar Saleh
p. 2

The assertion conflates a well-established instrument designed to assess risk of interpersonal violence in psychiatric patients and general criminal offenders (the HCR-20 V3) with a series of recently developed instruments designed specifically for the assessment of risk in individuals accused or suspected of terroristic activities (the VERA, MLG and ERG 22+). The use of the HCR-20 in this context is clearly inappropriate, given the targeted focus of Mr. Saleh's violence risk (i.e., terroristic or extremist violence). Although there is an extensive research literature supporting the utility of the HCR-20, none of that research has examined whether the HCR-20 accurately gauges risk in individuals charged with terrorism. Indeed, an unpublished document authored by Dr. Stephen Hart (author of the Multi-Level Guidelines and co-author of the HCR-20) recommends use of the HCR-20, despite acknowledging that the utility of this instrument is limited to the general assessment of interpersonal violence, and has no content that is specific to risk or terrorism.

The documents submitted by the U.S. Attorney's Office does reference several instruments that have been specifically developed to aid in the assessment of risk for terroristic violence. These are, of course, theoretically relevant to the issues raised by Mr. Saleh's case. However, while the intent behind these instruments is an important one, and a handful of published papers have described the development of these tools, there is no published research that demonstrates their accuracy or utility in predicting violence or recidivism in convicted terrorists. Specifically, there is no research demonstrating that the items that comprise these tools are associated with terroristic violence, or that scores or decisions based on these instruments correspond to an elevated risk of terroristic violence (i.e., discriminating between individuals who do and do not engage in terroristic violence). Rather, the very limited body of published research (all of which has been conducted by the developers of the tools) demonstrates only that practitioners perceive the scale items as useful and that they can be reliably rated (i.e., evaluators tend to agree on the presence or absence of the risk factors). Importantly, there is absolutely no evidence that the addition of any (or all) of these instruments improves the accuracy of clinical judgments.

Given the absence of any demonstrated validity for any of the instruments that have been developed for evaluating risk of terroristic violence, the assertion that the failure to use these instruments represents a shortcoming in the methodology is simply unfounded. Although the unpublished document authored by Dr. Hart and his colleagues recommends the use of these instruments (despite acknowledging the lack of research support), even the authors of these instruments do not assert that the failure to utilize untested instruments decreases the accuracy of the risk assessment process.

Please don't hesitate to contact me with any questions, or for further clarification.
